

Training in complementary therapy (KT), the method Craniosacral Therapy (CST) and the specialization in Craniosacral Biodynamics

In these modules we will practically explore the nature of complementary therapy and how the view of the KT-profession can be implemented in the existing practice and skills.

We will explore the specific attitude that is required to create the therapeutic connection with clients that are unique to the profession.

The interactive and empirically oriented teachings give new depth to the orientation to Health and salutogenesis as guiding principles.

Through dialogue and meaningful encounters, we experience how resources and resilience can be fostered to empower clients in their recovery skills.

The practical verbal aspects serve to explore the client's potential and allow for a process that leads them to greater self-awareness and self-regulation.

The practical work on the treatment table is dedicated to the principles of craniosacral biodynamics. There we will explore the orientation to the Health and the cooperation with the Potency of the Tide, which correspond to the salutogenetic approaches of KT.

Each approach and principle is process-oriented, meaning that the therapists enable clients to perceive, sense and feel themselves, to be connected to themselves and to receive tools to implement their insights in everyday life.

The terminology of KT is practiced and filled with content that comes from experience.

These skills also serve the writing of the essay for the equivalency procedure for OdA KT.

Contents

- The Swiss profession of complementary therapy (KT)
- Fundamentals and profile of the profession
- Internalization of the KT-view of the human being and the KT-attitude towards therapeutic interaction
- Integration of the METID (official Swiss method identification) in Craniosacral Therapy (CST)
- The newest development in Biodynamics
- Resolution oriented process work

Goals of KT

- Strengthening of self-regulation
- Fostering self-awareness
- Building recovery competences of the clients

Focus of KT

Through the method of CST:

- Expanding resources
- Strengthening resilience
- Establishing a sense of coherence
- Supporting self-empowerment

Principles of KT and CST

Principle of building a kind, compassionate therapeutic relationship

Principle of interaction and dialogue

Principle of enabling a positive experience

Principle of process-, solution- and resource-oriented approaches

Method specific process work, like intention setting, exploration, inquiry, observation, reflecting and the ability to be with the unfolding of a process

Biodynamic approach

- The biodynamic approach as a way to see human beings in their wholeness and their potential
- Training in perceptual skills
- Orientation towards inherent Health
- The Tide as an all-pervading life force
- The perceptual zones A - E
- Cooperation with the Tide and its processes of transmutation, ignition, permeation and disengagement
- Orientation towards the inherent Health

Competences for therapeutic interaction

- The core competences of KT
- The 4 process phases as part of the treatment protocol
- Reference to the essay for the GWV

Learning objectives

The participants

- understand the goals of KT and implement them practically in the CST method
- develop the focus of KT through appropriate practical verbal and non-verbal exercises
- work process-oriented and accompany processes to allow a positive, supportive and integrative experience
- offer therapeutic support and orientation to resources in the practice of CST
- work biodynamically with the inherent treatment plan
- implement the 4 process phases in a biodynamic treatment
- gain insights and reflect them in the context of KT
- receive support to achieve the GWV
